If the Subscriber does not order a discontinuance of his paper at the expiration of the year, it will be considered a new engagement.

ADVERTISEMENTS inserted in a neat and conspicuous form, at One Dollar per square for the first three insertions, and Twenty-five Cents per square for each continuance.

THE HALCYON, of the 25th of July, published at St. Stephens, (Alabama Territory,) contains the following interesting information.

In the present dearth of news, we conceive that our paper could not be more usefully devoted, than in presenting to the public a picture of the great progress our country is making in useful improvements. Three years since rarely an instance was known of a bale of cotton being exported from the Tombigbee, or Alabama settlements; in the present year, we have assurances, that one farmer in this neighhorhood, who does not work more than 20 hands, will clear saving all expences, at least 20,000 dollars from his cotton crop, beside making the necessary quantity of corn, &c. for family use; and we have reason to believe, that others will produce equally as great a crop. Farmers generally have expectations far beyond what could be imagined, from so new a country. Cotton gins have become very common, almost every farmer owning one. Indeed, in every point of view in which the country can be taken, none on earth present greater advantages. Added to a climate mild and salubrious, the production of the soil is most happily adapted to every species of vegetation. Fruits in as great abundance and perfection as in any part of the world, grow here most spontaneously. Nor have we heen unmindful of the necssity of a proper attention to the improvement of towns, and in the arts which give tone and spirit to commerce, the channel through which the productions of our luxurient and highly favoured country, find a reward for honest industry.

The town of St. Stephens, at the head of ship navigation, of the Tombigbee, is advancing with a rapidity beyond that of any place, perhaps in the Western country. It has, at this very moment, at least thirty new house's commenced, many of which would vie with those generally built in the cities of the United States. It has an Academy, supported by the voluntary contributions of the citizens, with two teachers and sixty or seventy students, who have since their commencement, made progress highly honorable to the institution, There is a Steam-Boat on the stocks, in size and force, calculated in an eminent degree, to give the greatest facility to our commerce on the ocean. It is intended, as occasion may require, to run from hence to New-Orleans, and return either up the Tombigbee, or Albama, as high as Fort Claiborne. The navigation of the Tombigbee, as high as this place, is perfectly secure to vessels of any size, that can enter Mobile bay at any season of the year. The annual amount of merchandize, brought and vended at this place, is not less than fifty thousand dollars, and is still increasing.

The town of Jackson, about ten miles from this place, is in a state of rapid improvement, and we are informed affords considerable facility to trade.

Fort Claiborne, on the Alabama, has a considerable population; and from its local situation, and the richness of country around it, bids, fair to become the most flourishing town in the territory. It is situate immediately on a high bank, and presents a most beautiful and romantic prospect, commanding a view of the Alabama, above and below, as far as the eye can reach, and the high hills which border the meanders of the river, present a most picturesque scenery.

At the late sales a company, principally composed of merchants of this place, purchased the sight of old Fort Stoddart, which we understand they are about to lay off into lots, and offer for sale immediately: many of them are determined to establish stores and erect ware-houses, so soon as the lots are disposed of. The situation of this place combine a greater variety of advantages, than any place near the seaboard. It has a straight and direct communication with the Mobile Bay, and vessels can approach it in some instances with as great facility as the town of Mobile---the same wind that carries them to Blakely or to Mobile will in a short time waft them to the safe and convenient harbor at Fort Stoddart.

Mobile is situated at the head of Mobile bay, and commands a very handsome view of the bay below, and river above. It is improving in a ratio with that of the country.

The lots in the town of Blakely, have lately been sold, and we are told, great preparations are making for its rapid improvement. It is understood that considerable capital has already been appropriated to that place, and great expectations are entertained from its superior advantages, that it will shortly become a place of considerable commercial importance.

The country lying above on the Tombigbee and Alabama, possesses, we understand, qualities (in point of soil) superior to those above described; and we calculate ere long, on seeing the rich productions of the counties of Madison, Elk, Blount and Shelby, and those of Montgomery & Monroe, floating down our rivers and crowding the streets of the towns on their borders.

BITE OF A SERPENT.

In page 204, vol. 111. (Memoirs of doctor Lettsom) the following curious relation is given by Bishop Madison.

In a town, this fall, among the mountains of our country, near to the place where I happened to be, a boy of twelve or thirteen years of age, was bit on the side of one of his feet, by a very venomous serpent, commonly called a copperhead. The poison of this animal is not less dreaded than that of the crotalus horridus, or rattle snake. The boy was carried home, and soon discovered symptoms of great uneasiness. A swelling commenced, and the wound was slightly scarified. A by-stander, acquainted, I suppose, with the practice of the Indians, recommended the following application: A chicken was caught, the feathers plucked from the abdomen, and that part closely applied to the wound. The chicken instantly grew sick, and died as quick as if its head had been cut off. A second was applied in a similar manner; it died in about four minutes. A third also shared the same fate, in nearly eight minutes. A fourth was applied; it discovered some uneasiness, but did not die. The procees was then discontinued. The boy was relieved, and suffered no greater inconvenience from the wound than he would have done from the puncture of a needle or pin, He was perfectly well on the second day. Having heard of what had passed, I was preparing to go to the house where the boy was, when his father a very respectable man, a magistrate, and noted for his strict veracity, together with two other persons, upon whose information I entirely relied, from an intimate acquaintance with them, came to me. From them I heard the particulars related, as they were present, and witnessed the effects of this extraordinary imbition of the poison. There remains not the shadow of doubt of the fact, as I have stated it. I saw the boy on the third day.

The copper-head resembles the mockasen somewhat, but it is larger. Some indeed consider it is the female rattlesnake; but I rather supposed it to be a distinct species. This snake is not mentioned by Catesby. Might not the same remedy be applied, in the ease of a bite from a mad dog?

From the New-York Evening Post, Sep. 10.

THE WONDERFUL SEA-SERPENT.

In addition to the information, which the appearance of the sea-serpent in the waters of New England, has lately bro't to sight, we are enabled, by the politeness of Dr. Mitchell, to add the following interesting particulars, for the amusement of our readers.

Copy of a letter addressed to Dr Mitchell; by our late consul at Bordeaux, now in the treasury department, William Lee, esq.

"Washington, September 2, 1817.

"My dear sir—The description given in our newspapers of a sea-serpent, lately seen for several days, in and about Cape Ann harbour, has brought to my recollection one of this species.

"On a passage I made from Quebec, in 1787, in a schooner of about 80 tons burthen, while atanding in for the Gut of Canso the island of Cape Breton being 4 leagues distant, one of the crew cried out 'a shoal a head!'—the helm was instantly put down to tack ship, when to our great astonishment, this shoal, as we thought to be, moved off, and as it passed athwart the bow of our vessel, we discovered it to be an enormous sea-serpent, four times at least as long as the schr. Its back was of a dark green colour, forming above the water a number of little hillocks, resembling a chain of hogsheads.

I was then but a lad, and being much terrified ran below till the monster was at some distance from us. I did not see his head distinctly; but those who did, after I had hid myself in the cabin said it was as large as the small boat of the schr. I recollected, the tremendous ripple and noise he made in the water, as he went off from us, which I compared at the time to that occasioned by the launching of a ship.

"My venerable friend, Mr. ——, of your city was a passenger with me at the time. He will corroborate this statement, and probably furnish you with a better description of this monster, for I well recollect his taking his stand at the bow of the vessel, with great courage, to examine it while the other passengers were intent only on their own safety.

"At Halifax, and on my return to Boston, when frequently deseribing this monster I was laughed at so immoderately that I found it necessary to remain silent on the subject, to escape the imputation of using the traveller's privilege of dealing in the marvellous."

OUR FISHERMEN.

AN ORIGINAL ANECDOTE.

It will be recolected that admiral Coffin, of the British navy, visited the United States a year or two since. While at Gadsby's hotel, in Baltimore, he related the following anecdote—

Being in the South seas, he fell in with a Nantucket whale-ship, and, desirious of seeing the whole ceremony and operation of catching a whale, in true yankee style, he asked liberty to go out in one of the boats, for the purpose. This was readily agreed to, provided he would take a station, and promise obedience to orders—no unnecessary person being permitted in them. He consented and took his seat as an oarsman. After a while, they encountered a whale and struck him secundum artem, and away he went dragging the boat after him with such lightning-like rapidity as to make so deep a trough in the sea, that it appeared, and perhaps really was, several inches higher than the uppermost part, or gun-wale, of the boat!—The man, whose place it was, stood ready with the axe, to cut the line when necessary. The admiral, much terrified at so novel a danger, looked at the axe-man who, perfectly collected and intent on his duty, was as calm as if he had been reposing on a bed of roses—and called out, with great vehemence and agitation, "Cut the rope you ————." Not yet," said the fisherman, very deliberately, and keeping his eye on the object—"we can't afford to loose the yarn!" Nor did they—for they caught the whale, without loss or damage. The admiral declared that so great was his terror on the occasion, that he would rather be grappled in a frigate to a French 74, than assist in taking another whale.

EDMUND BURKE.

This great man had in his heart a rooted contempt for the character and profession of a merchant. He had imbibed all the predjudices of an old Romanus with respect to trade. The words merchant and thief always appeared to him nearly synonymous; and he never could separate the idea of commerce from that of exclusion, monopoly, and avarice. 'Do not talk to me, said he once in the house of commons, 'of the liberality and patriotism of a merchant: his God is his gold—his country his invoice—his desk his altar—his ledger his bible—his church his exchange—and he has faith in none but his banker.'

Burke used to relate the following story:—when he had made a speech which was well received from the hustings of Bristol, at the time of the rupture between this country and America, poor Cruger, who was one of the candidates, was standing by his side. Equally averse with Burke to the American contest, but master of no other language than the short vocabulary of the counting house, he cried 'I say ditto to Mr. Burke, I say ditto to Mr. Burke.'

PITTSBURGH.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1817.

The Orleans Gazette states the number of interments in the Protestant burying ground during one week, ending August 25, at 41; greatest number in one day 18. In the Catholic burying ground 127 had been interred from the 1st to the 25th of August. The Gazette remarks that the mortality of the season had been much exaggerated.

Mac Gregor's bulletins, of his army of Elfymen, headed "Citizen Gregor Mac Gregor, General of Brigade, of the Armies of New Grenada and Venezuela, and General in chief of the Armies of the Floridas, with Commission from the Governments of Mexico, reminds us (says the Albany Gazette) of the person who Sterne once knew, whose name, names, or nomen multitudinis was Cæsar. Augustus-Gustavus--Adolphus--Mark-Anthony-Timothy Keeling, dancing master!"

HARMONY, INDIANA.

The land held by them in Pennsylvania, from the increase of their numbers, being too small for them, they purchased a large and beautiful tract on the Wabash, in the new state of Indiana, and removed to it just about three years ago. It was then in a state of nature. They already (says Niles Register) have many good houses, large work shops and extensive barns—one of them 100 feet by 45, another 200 feet long and 45 wide; a steam mill driving two pair of stones; a very large brick house in the shape of an L, for Mr. Rapp, with an excellent and highly ornamented garden, inferiour to few in the United States; they have 1500 Merino sheep, whose wool they manufacture into excellent broadcloths, with a large stock of cattle, hogs, &c. and carry on almost every trade and manufacture, as well for their own use as to make things for sale—among them are tinworkers, shoemakers, saddlers, joiners, carpenters, hatters, stocking and other weavers, tanners, blacksmiths, &c. &c. They have many acres planted with the vine, 200 in wheat, 40 in rye, 30 in barley, 80 in oats. 30 with meadow grass, and 500 enclosed in pasture fields. All these things have been done in three years. This society is numerous, amounting, we believe to nearly 800 families, who have all things in common; are among the most industrious and economical people in the world, and very harmless and inoffensive. The first body of them emigrating from Germany, settled in Pennsylvania in 1803—4. They then consisted of 160 families, and were soon after joined by 90 families more.

THE APPROACHING ELECTION.

The contest between the friends of Gen. Heister and Mr. Findlay is still carried on with undiminished energy and virulence; and each party appears to be equally confident of success. To an indifferent spectator, a greater engima could not be presented than that which grows out of the calculations of the contending parties. On each side, the majorities in every division of the State, are stated with an appearance of arithmetical precision which would seem to defy doubt; & yet there can be no question, that both parties reciprocally magnify or underrate their respective numbers. In all calculations which we have seen, with our means of judging, we entertain no doubt of this common aberration:- -and we have still as little doubt as to the final result. 'Till Mr. Findlay releases himself from an odious load of accusations and imputations, which have been, literally speaking, "harnessed on his shoulders," he can have no reasonable expectation of receiving the suffrages of a sensible and independent community. It is impossible that a man (whatever may be his qualifications for the station) whose official conduct is so completely envoloped in "clouds and darkness," should succeed. Charges, so well substantiated, can never be a passport to office or honor. Phil. Gaz.

Since the late exploit at New York in the mystery of nose-biting, it has become quite a fashionable amusement. A late Portsmouth paper mentions the occurrence of a duel at Kennebunk, in which one of the parties had his nose bitten off. This is an improvement upon the proverb, 'to put one's nose out joint, and is certainly a new mode of 'bringing a nose to the grindstone.' It is stated also in the Boston papers, that not long since, while in a foreign country, a man belonging to Salem bit off the left ear of one of his mess-mates —and that too, without provocation, and while the victim slept. If the human teeth are in future to be applied to such purposes, that envied possession, a good set of grinders, may soon become an object of horror. Woe then to manufacturers of patent dentifrices—A new feature may appear in the science of nosology—and the art of restoring lost ears to long heads; and of fitting artificial smellers to emunctories deprived of their cartilaginous support, may become a desideratum with the lovers of music and the takers of snuff.

WILLIAM W. JENNER, a schoolmaster, convicted at the court of Sessions in this city, of assault and battery, and gross indecency to several females scholars, was on Saturday, sentenced to three years imprisonment at hard labour in the Penetentiary, and fined five hundred dollars. We cannot but pronounce this sentence (tho' to the extent of the law) as being too mild for the enormity of the offence. Such is importance and responsibility of the trust, such the awful effects arising from an abuse of it, that the law should admit a greater latitude in the punishment. By a statute of Elizabeth, made of force in S. Carolina, the like offence is punishable with death; and in 1813, a foreigner was executed at Charleston for an offence of a like nature as that of Jenner's.

N. Y. Advo.

A maniack, in the Pennsylvania hospital, lately made the following observations: —We that are confined here are only called mad, because our madness does not happen to agree with that of the rest of the world. Every body thinks his neighbor mad, if his pursuits happen to be opposite to his own. His neighbours think the same of him. But then their two kinds of madness do not interfere with each other. Now and then there comes an eccentric man who thinks them all mad: him they catch and lock up. That's my case.

The Paris papers lately mentioned the execution of a young man at Lyons, charged as principle in the recent seditious practices in that city. The following particulars respecting him are given in the Bath Herald.

"A gentleman, who was eye-witness of the affair, has related to us the following particulars of the apprehension of the young man who was last week executed at Lyons for seditious practices, and died with such audatious boldness. It appears that he had acted as secretary to the Ultra Reforming Society in that city, and when their plot was discovered, a considerable reward was offered for his apprehension; he, however, succeeded in effectually secreting himself for several days from the argus-eyed police, when the young ex-secretary took his passage, under a feigned name, in a vessel going down the river to Chalons (in which our informant was passenger.) He had got safely on board, and the sloop under weigh; but in less than a quarter of an hour was hailed to arrest her course, by a boat rowed with great velocity, and filled with gens d'armes; they got along side the vessel, and demanded if Mr.——, was on board; and being answered in the negative, they ascended the sloop and proceeded to examine the passengers, comparing their persons with a minute printed description of the young revolutionist. He was soon identified; and instantly leaped overboard, and was instantly followed by one of the officers—they both swam well, but the young refugee finding himself likely to become a captive, gave himself up to desperation—turned round on his pursuer, smiled contemptuously on him, folded his arms and sunk, as all the spectators thought, to rise no more.—The officer, however, was not thus to be deprived of his anticipated reward; he dived after him, but without effect; a second time he dived without more success; but on a third effort, he was seen to rise grasping his devoted victim. He swam with him to the vessel, where means for restoring animation were successfully applied. The young fellow was then properly secured, he was taken on shore, tried, found guilty, and executed."

From the Salem Register, Sept. 13.

The vigilance of Cape Ann is still employed respecting the new comer in their waters. We saw one of the most enterprising of their citizens in the dress of a seaman, and upon asking, found he was then going into the bay to look for the extraordinary fish which had so long visited their shores, but had so long escaped a very intimate acquaintance. We wish then success in taking him.

From the Boston Evening Intelligencer, Sept. 13.

The Sea Serpent has again made his appearance in Gloucester, and his neck and head were distinctly visible. Three yellow rings about one foot apart and 2 inches broad were discovered, which circumstance leads to a suspicion among some persons, that perhaps two animals of this description are in the coast, since an observation of the kind has before been made. That he has not been killed is to be regretted upon various accounts, to silence doubt and confound incredulity—and to prevent the destruction of small fish; but that he has not been attacked is not singular, for the animal has always appeared by surprize, when no boats were on the watch and frequently in unexpected places.

TOASTS.

At a late meeting of Printers, the following toasts were drank:

Fertility to brains, and an insatiable appetite to curiosity.

A literary war, a smart press, and devastation to paper and ink.

Empty stomachs, attic stories, and clear intellects to the republic of authors.

The liberty of the press, and the press of liberty.

May every wit want his dinner who will not cudgel his brains for it.

The intrigues of Parnassus, the foundling hospital of wit, and accouchers of the quill.

The memory of Dr. Faustus, and success to the black art.

May the stomachs of epicures be transferred to their brains, that intellect may feed, while gluttony does penance.

A handsome preface, ingenious introduction, good title, bold impression, strong binding, and general circulation to friendship and hospitality.

DIED, on Tuesday morning last, Mr. WILLIAM MORROW, in the 73d year of his age.
